

I have never thought to say so but it becomes light quietly:

to be in this and not notice it, not hear in its transition an incipient voice, words for it, so that my breathing might also become its presence:

a way to learn to walk to the dry arroyo at the end of the street without wanting to find water flowing in it.

